Agreement Reached In Russell County Suit

Russell County--Agreement has been reached in a Russell county teacher's due process suit against her employing school board.

The school board has agreed to reimburse Mrs. Evelyn J. Johnson $6,100 in back pay and reemploy her in a teaching position for the 1973-74 school term. In addition, the board has agreed to make restoration of certain of Mrs. Johnson's retirement benefits.

In the VEA-supported suit Mrs. Johnson had charged school officials with refusing to reemploy her without first giving her written reasons for dismissal and without an opportunity for a hearing to answer the charges against her. The suit cited the manner of discharging her as being in conflict with both the board's own regulations and Virginia state law. It further noted lack of due process as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

The suit, dismissed on the pleading by the U. S. District court for the Western District of Virginia, was sent back to the district court by the U. S. Court of Appeals of the Fourth Circuit Nov. 20, 1972. The appellate court, in remanding the case, said Mrs. Johnson had made sufficient allegations for denial of due process. The district court had first ruled she did not.

In returning the case to the district court for trial on the merits the appellate court cited two cases, Perry vs. Sindermann and Board of Regents vs. Roth, which indicated that injury to professional reputation or livelinood caused by an abrupt termination of engagement of substantial longevity warrants an inquiry as to whether the non-renewal satisfied constitutional due process. Mrs. Johnson claimed that continuous employment over a significant period of time--such as Mrs. Johnson's 29 years was the equivalent of tenure.

Mrs. Johnson taught in Russell County schools from 1942 until April 13, 1970, when she received a letter from the superintendent stating that she would not be retained for the 1970-71 academic year.

Mrs. Johnson appealed the school officials action through the Virginia Education Association's Professional Rights and Responsibilities (PR&R) Commission after efforts to have her contract renewed had been exhausted. The PR&R Commission, after an investigation by her peers, recommended to the school division that she be reinstated. When she was not, action was sought through the courts.

ALABAMA BAPTIST

Ref. Curtis Elliott -Pastor
10:00 a. m. Sunday School
11:45 a. m. First Sunday Worship Service.

The revival held at the Alahama Baptist Church began september 30 through October 5 was a great success. The pastor of the church conducted the service. Prayer service began each night at 7:30 and preaching began at 8:00.

Large crowds attended each night and on Friday night it was extra large. Everyone who came enjoyed the service. The pastor Choir of the church furnished the music each night. Different churches represented the guest ministers on Friday night were Rev. Howard Flood, Rev. James Franklin, Pastor Sharon Baptist Chuirch, Farmville, Va. and Rev. McLanghlin from St. Luke Baptist Church in Campbell County.

The Pastor was so happy to have the visiting ministers. The service was wonderful. Seven converts during the revival service. Visiting churches that wre represented were. White Oak Grove, Zion Baptist, Mt. Zion, St. Andrews, Triumph, Mt. Lyle, Sulphur Spring, and Naruna. The Alabama Baptist Church expresses their thanks to everyone that attended. Members from Jordan Baptist Church turned out in large numbers. The offering for the week was very, very good. The pastor Rev. Curtis Elliott is on vacation. We hope he will have a happy one. Rev. James Franklin rendered service at the Alabama Baptist Church, October 7, 1973. The services were very good. Subject: The Lord Will Make A Way.

Everyone enjoyed the message. Thank each and everyone again for coming out and making our revival a success says Mrs. Catherine Haskins. "Thank you again."

Am I Covered

Sometimes new products enter the market that are not specifically named as being covered, nor are they excluded in Homeowners policies. In such cases, both the agents and the companies attempt to fully protect the insured against loss until the policy can be revised to suit the public's needs. Such an example is discussed in the following question, and points up the various interpretations of what is part of the main dwelling under Coverage A; what is an appurtenant structure under Coverage B; and, what is considered personal property under Coverage C.

Q: We have a Homeowners insured who recently purchased an outdoor sluminum swimming pool valued at approximately $5,000. The entire structure is about seven feet high, including the fencing, and is not attached in any permanent fashion to the ground. Our company has asked that we increase Coverage B to cover this as an appurtenant structure; another company with a similar situation asked the agent to increase the Coverage A limit to cover the pool, and we feel that Coverage C would be appropriate, since the pool does not seem to fit the requirements of "real property". We would very much appreciate your comments on the proper way to cover this type of pool.

A: We feel that any one of the three ways that you mention would be appropriate, although we lean toward Coverage A since "outdoor equipment" is actually specified within this coverage. By the same token, this could be considered a structure appurtenant to the premises and thereby covered under Coverage B. Whichever way you elect, we suggest that you obtain a letter from the insuring company agreeing to the manner selected so that in the event of claim there is no disagreement with your insured.

Abitt Speaks Out For Godwin

STATEMENT BY WATKINS M. ABBITT, Former 4th District Congressman, 10:30, Monday, Sept. 24

"On Saturday, Sept. 22, Henry Howell accused Mills Godwin of shifting his allegiances, campaigning as a Republican in Southwest Virginia and not in Southside Virginia.

I have been an observer of the Virginia political scene for a number of years now, and if there's a past-master on "shifting" in the whole Commonwealth of Virginia, that expert is Henry Howell.

I have been traveling with Mills Godwin in the Southside and elsewhere. He is pleased to be the Republican candidate for Governor of Virginia and he has consistently represented himself as such since he won the Republican nomination in June.

What really bothers Henry Howell is that there are many, many conservative Democrats and independents, as well as Republicans, working for Mills Godwin across Virginia - north, east, south and west. Henry Howell is frantically trying to shift gears from liberal to conservative and you can hear the screeching all across the Southside.

His "shifting" was quite in evidence when he forsook the label of the Democratic party to campaign as an independent after he succeeded in packing the Democratic Central Committee with his left-leaning friends. He did a quick shoffle to avoid the public endorsement of this radical bunch, all the while making certain he got the commitment of the Northern Virginia contingent of the Democratic party, probably the best henchmen Henry had in his Democratic party takeover. He's counting on these liberals to do his door-to-door work for him in Northern Virginia, but don't tell my friends in the Southside.

For master of the political birouette, a "shifter" of long standing, I give you Henry Howell.

Let me innumerate just a few more of the stands on which Henry has done a 180-degree turn.

 Howell advocated crosstown busing between the Virginia and the Maryland suburbs and the District of Columbia last year. Recently when confronted with his documented stand, he said "I never said that."

 Howell spoke in favor of consolidation of school districts last spring. Now he shifts over to "Well, I'm opposed to forced consolidation."

 Henry Howell endorsed Governor Godwin in 1965 and said Godwin would be the first in a long line of progressive governors. As recently as last year, he praised Godwin's excellent record and said God win had left office at the "mountain top." Most viewers of the political scene would say he's shifted from that stance.

 Henry Howell has made a career out of attaching the "big boys," implying the men who do business in Virginia are less than honest. Now he accepts $145,000 from his own big boy.

Bazaar Set For St. Anne's

St. Anne's Episcopal Church will sponsor a bazaar on Saturday, October 27th, from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. in the building behind the church.
